Secession Not Tolerated North-Newspaper Office Mobbed.

There were spicy times at Concord, N. H., on Thursday afternoon last, the occasion being the 'smoking out' of a weekly journal, called the Democratic Standard, of Secession views, whose office and materials were wholly destroyed. A connected narrative of the affair is as follows: The paper has all along been known as a sympathizer with treason and rebellion. It has assaulted the Executive, maligned the soldiers, and aided in all possible ways the enemy. For the past few weeks it has outrageously and wantonly reflected on the character and conduct of the returning soldiers, until they could stand it patiently no longer. Early in the afternoon several soldiers of the First Regiment went to the printing office and asked for some of the papers, with the intention of purchasing them. The publishers refused to seil them. The soldiers afterward went into the street, and by some means obtained several copies; these were read to an excited and increasing multitude. In one article the editor spoke of the premium which Congress had offered to induce the three months' men to re-enlist for three years. The writer then went on to state that the men would be allowed to change from one company or regiment to another, in order to get clear of obnoxious or incompetent officers, and closed by remarking that—"this may be the case with a certain Northern New England regiment, a portion of which actually mutinied against the abolition Colonel who commands it, before leaving for the seat of war. A number of his men having demanded a furlough to visit their friends over Sunday, were refused. Whereupon they formed into line and charged bayonets on the recusant commander, who made sudden tracks for the nearest fence. This movement the men greeted with shouts of derisive laughtea, and 'three cheers for Jeff. Davis. They were subsequently granted the required furlough, and 'order reighed in Warsaw.' After reaching Washington, it was found necessary to divide this regiment, and station portions of it at different points.'

The following is another specimen of the matter which the edition of the paper referred to contained: " Our Southern papers are filled with heart-sickening accounts of the murders and robberies which individuals in Old Abe's Mob are perpetrating on the Southern people. Innocent women and children are shot on their own door steps, for wearing what is called 'secesssion bonnets.' No wonder the Northern people run, when the honest men of the South march toward them." The excitement continued to increase until a frantic-collection had surrounded the building, and were filling the air with loud shouts and imprecations. At this time, several persons went up to the printing rooms, which were in the third story of Low's block, and found the doors locked Immediately after, a revolver was fired, and the ball passed through the floor into the second story, into a room occupied by Tailor Stewart's sewing women, causing, of course, great consternation. From the direction of the ball, it is evident that weapons was fired for the simple purpose of intimidating the crowd.

Soon after, the publishers, four in number, ap-peared at the windows armed with revolvers, guns, and axes. One of them very impudently reached forth a Colt's revolver, shook it, and told the crowd they were well prepared, and should defend themselves to the last extremity. Those who composed the mob answered with ejaculations like the following: "Are you a traitor?" You rebel and Secessionist-fire if you dare At this time the City Marshal appeared and read the riot act, and with great difficulty prevented the soldiers from ascending the stairway. John M. Hill, Esq., and several prominent citizens endeavored to calm the excited populace, but with no effect; they then went up to the office and told the publishers that if they would give up their arms, they would endeavor to protect their persons and property. They agreed to this, but before anything could be done, the soldiers were at the head of the stairs, and all parleying was at an end. The rioters attempted to enter, but the door was bolted, and they commenced staving out the panels. Firearms were then freely used inside, and several of the crowd were wounded-one in the arms, another in the hand, while bullets passed through the clothes of a number. The firing was distinctly heard in the tance above and below the building. The soldiers were unable to procure their muskets, and they had no weapons excepting dirks. The publishers escaped into the attie by a ladder, and the rioters took possession. The work of demolition was now commenced in good earnest; types, desks, paper of all kinds, and in fact everything which is used about a printing office, came tumbling down on the sidewalk in a fearful manner. Bonfires were immediately kindled, and the relies of the secession press were thrown upon the burning pile, while the soldiers gathered around the smouldering ruins, and gave vent to their joy in the wildest acclamations. After the fires had somewhat abated, and nearly everything had been consumed, the City Marshal went into the office and prevailed upon the rioters to go into the street. The soldiers discovered the hiding places of the publishers, and seized their unfortunate victims, but the citizens rescued them, and with great difficulty carried them to the Police Station. Their preservation from death was a very remarkable circumstance, and had it not been for a few brave men, their lives would have paid the penalty of their deeds. Among those who displayed the most commendable bravery in rescuing them, 1 would mention John Foss, Esq., the Warden of the Prison. The victims were hurried to the Police Station on the full run, the crowd following after, and shouting, " Lynch them!" "Lynch them!" They were taken to the State Prison for safe-keeping. Letters were found in the office from Union men in Virginia, "asking them why they published such articles," and saying "even that in that country such a paper could not live," etc. Papers in abundance were found fixing unmis-takably the editorship of the obnoxious paper on

Edmund Burke of Newport, N. H. It has always been surmised that such was the fact, but now it is conclusively shown by abundant proof. A coat of tar and feathers was prepared for the Palmers, publishers, but the police and the warden of the prison saved them from it. The streets were illuminated in the evening by the burning tar in front of the office, but the crowd, however, was very civil and orderly.

The building in which the Democratic Standard was printed is owned by George Hutchings, and is not much damaged. The windows were broken in, signs and blinds torn down, and the doors broken up. The type belonged to John B. Palmer, and is said to be mostly the old material used by Odlin & Wilson when they printed the The ringleader of the crowd was Charles I Clark, a boy 14 years of age, who has been with Captain Sturtevant, of Concord, as a clerk. The soldiers, after the shots were fired, went to work coolly and took down the blinds of the windows, and sign-boards, attempting in some instances to procure their arms, but were restrained from this by their officers. The Palmers say they were encouraged and urged on in their treasonable course by prominent citizens of Concord and Manchester, and that they had received the promise of one thousand men from Manchester in case of danger, and that if they do not come up to the "scratch" and help them out of their present trouble they will

- A Man for the Times.

The Hon. Joseph Holt of Kentucky, lately Secretary of War under Buchanan, has recently made several addresses in Boston and New York on the State of the Union, and breathing the warmest patriotism. From these, we make a few extracts, but recommend our readers to find and peruse the entire addresses. No one can read them without feeling his patriotism warmed: What we now need is a patriotism that will abide the ordeal of fire, a patriotism that is purged of all selfishness, and from all fear, which is heroic and exhaustless; which vows with every throb of life, with every pulse that it will rally -if stricken down it will rise again, and that under the pressure of no circumstances of defeat, of sorrow, or of suffering shall the national flag be abandoned, or the honor of the country compromised. What we need is a patriotism which rises fully to the comprehension of the actual and the awful perils in which our institutions are placed, and which is willing to devote every power of body and mind and fortune to their deliverance. A patriotism which obliterating all party lines-fcheers long and continued, and repeated again and again, breaking forth in a loud hurrah] -a patriotism which, obliterating all party lines and entombing all party issues, says to the President of the United States: Here are our lives and our estates; use them freely, use them boldly; but use them successfully. For, looking upon the graves of our fathers and upon the cradles of our children, we have sworn that though all hings else should perish, this country and this Union shall live.

But if true to ourselves, as I believe we will be -if true to the memory of the past and the grandeur of the present-our arms will triumph, and the Union sentiment of the South will make that triumph complete. And after this turmoil of battle and bloodshed has ceased, there will arise a future for our country bright as the rainbow that spans Niagara's waters.

I am gratified that during the somewhat extended tour I have recently made, I have nowhere heard the public voice faint or the public purpose falter in the vigorous prosecution of the war until the Stars and Stripes shall wave once more over every flagstaff from which they have been torn. [Applause.] Nowhere have I heard the word compromise, -- [enthusiastic applause,]-a word which cannot now be uttered except by disloyal lips or by those speaking directly in the interests of rebellion. [Applause,] So long as the rebels have arms in their hands, there is nothing left to compromise but the honor of the country and the integrity of the government, and no man with a soul above that of a coward is prepared for such submission. When the wise man of old, sitting in judgment upon the rival claims of two women to a child, decided that it should be cut in twain, it was the false mother who rejoiced in the judgment, while the true mother preferred to save the life of the child. So the man who is willing that this Union should be severed by the sword of treason may have been born upon American soil, but he has not an American heart. The true son of the country, like the true mother, prefers the Union above all considerations.

No man can doubt the honesty and loyalty of support and all the consolation which a generous and warm-hearted patriotism can give him. If this Union is dismembered, and this governstreet, and thousands filled the way to a long dis-[Three rousing cheers were given for Mr. Holt, the audience rising and waving hats and hand-
